The contribution of social enterprise

Meeting social need

Using business success to meet social or environmental ends

Providing opportunity and skills for marginalised groups – and in some cases a potential route off benefits

Increasing enterprise

Attracting new entrepreneurs who want to make a difference to society or the environment

Encouraging more women, under-represented groups and young people to start their own enterprises

Improving public services

Shaping service design

Pioneering new approaches and winning contracts to deliver services

Encouraging ethical markets

Responding to new markets driven by increasing ethical consumerism

Raising the bar by adopting pioneering ethical practices, such as fair trade

7

Social Innovation

New ideas, meeting unmet social needs,

Not driven by profit maximisation

Operates in many fields:-

- public policy
- urban planning
- social movements
- community development
- design, technology
- social entrepreneurship

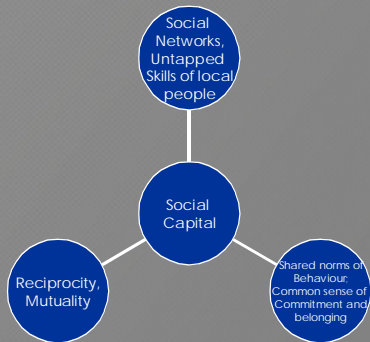

Requires:-

- leaders
- finance
- markets open for social solutions
- incubator
- institutions for systemic change
- attitudes cutting across public, private and non-profit sector
